Prepared by The Right Click Projects
May 2026 · 28-day audience window

At a Glance

1249 profile visitors · May 2026 · 28-day window

Of the 1,249 unique visitors to Zachary's profile in May, 10 left enough information to be identified and classified. That 10 includes two VP-level marketing buyers (direct dotfun ICP), five founders and C-suite executives with active marketing problems, and three ecosystem contacts from adjacent roles. The named visitor set is small because LinkedIn limits visible profile data — but the signal quality is high. These are not random browsers. They engaged with specific content, then came to look at who wrote it.

Tier 1 & Tier 2 — Highest-Signal Viewers

The people worth dotfun's attention this month

Tier 1 — Direct ICP

These 2 viewers are the direct buyer profile for dotfun: CMOs, VP Marketing leaders, demand gen directors, and CROs at B2B companies. They came to the profile unprompted. That is an inbound signal worth noting.

Fractional CMOs, founders, and investors showing up in the viewer mix is not noise. It is distribution. These are people who advise the exact companies this client sells to, and they are reading the same content.

What This Audience Is Telling You

Strategic read — May 2026

Marketing leaders are reading and investigating

Kate Evetts (Director, Campaign Marketing at Palo Alto Networks) and Chelsey Gomez (VP of Marketing) both visited in May — and Kate left a 5-paragraph comment on the 180-day attribution post describing her own 5-quarter lookback. That level of specificity means the content is hitting a real nerve. VP+ marketing buyers at B2B SaaS companies are exactly who dotfun is built for. Two of them showed up without being asked.

Founders and CEOs are in research mode

Ben Werth (CEO, Semarchy), Dorian Lazzari (CEO, Cubish), Ray Gibson (4x founder), and Taseen Alam (Founder, FlowBound) all visited this month. They engaged on the content — Reddit ad arbitrage, the Flood Watch brand case study — then came to look at Zachary's profile. Founders at this stage are not passively browsing. They are evaluating whether to hire.

The 180-day attribution post is the primary pull this month

Multiple Tier 1 and Tier 2 viewers — Kate Evetts, Stephen Tarleton, Caz Young — all engaged with the same post: the 180-day sales motion piece. That post names a problem so specifically that the people who have it feel seen. More content in that analytical, system-diagnostic voice will keep pulling the same caliber of audience.

Four warm conversations to have in June

Kate Evetts and Chelsey Gomez are the clearest outreach candidates — both Tier 1, both engaged, both reachable. Stephen Tarleton has commented across multiple months and is already a warm relationship. Ray Gibson is a 2nd-degree connection worth moving to 1st. These four names are the June action list — not cold outreach. Each one has a specific reason to receive a message.
