

Kashyap Pavra - Content Performance

June 2026 | The Right Click Projects

What happened this month

Kashyap's June content started establishing a sharper founder-led category point of view: premium Shopify work is not decoration, it is conversion infrastructure.

7,446

IMPRESSIONS

2,625

MEMBERS REACHED

194

ENGAGEMENTS

+113

NEW FOLLOWERS

Strategic read

- Founder story led distribution
The two strongest posts were people/story led: the college-project origin story and the Paavan/team story. The audience responded to business proof with human stakes.
- Shopify POV is the lane
Posts about product photography, template fatigue and hidden product data created the clearest category authority. This is where Kashyap can own a point of view.
- Design talent created reach
The Indian talent/taste post had the third-highest reach, suggesting founder-pride plus design philosophy can travel beyond immediate Shopify operators.
- Next month needs more buyer pain
The content should keep translating design quality into revenue outcomes: conversion, AOV, repeat trust, premium positioning and global readiness.

Posts Reviewed

Ranked by June performance

Top June posts

Why these posts matter

The report prioritizes posts that either created reach, showed strong engagement, or clarified Kashyap's authority with the right buyer: e-commerce founders, Shopify operators, premium D2C brands and design-led retailers.

Breakout Theme: Founder Proof

Selected June post intelligence

In 2019 I started a college project...

Why it worked

It made the work feel earned and specific instead of generic agency positioning.

Audience signal

The engagement suggests Kashyap's audience responds when the brand story is tied to standards, skill and business outcomes.

Repeat next month

Turn more internal proof into external market lessons: what SimplSo learned, what clients miss, and why premium brands should care.

Breakout Theme: Team/Paavan Story

Selected June post intelligence

I watched Paavan work for a long time before...

Why it worked

It made the work feel earned and specific instead of generic agency positioning.

Audience signal

The engagement suggests Kashyap's audience responds when the brand story is tied to standards, skill and business outcomes.

Repeat next month

Turn more internal proof into external market lessons: what SimpliSo learned, what clients miss, and why premium brands should care.

Category POV: Premium Shopify Stores

Selected June post intelligence

Kashyap, our Shopify store looks incredibly premium...

This is the cleanest buyer-pain hook: a beautiful store that does not convert. It speaks directly to D2C founders who care about premium design but need revenue outcomes.

Promote this post to reach people who matter to you.

Boost

Kashyap(Kash) Pavra • You

For e-commerce brands that have outgrown their Shopify theme...

Visit my website

3w •

"Kashyap, our Shopify store looks incredibly premium. So why aren't we converting any sales?" I had an e-commerce founder ask me this last week.

And he was right. His site was visually stunning. Perfect minimalist aesthetic, beautiful typography, pristine color palettes . It looked like a luxury gallery.

But his conversion numbers were completely flat.

We ran a quick audit to see what was happening under the hood, and the main culprit wasn't a broken script or an advertising leak.

It was simpler than that: The site looked beautiful, but it was practically hiding the product data.

There's a weird assumption in e-commerce that to look "premium," you have to wipe out all information.

We hide fabric weights, manufacturing transparency, hardware specifications, and precise dimensions inside tiny, collapsed accordion tabs just to keep a design looking clean.

The logic is usually: "Attention spans are shrinking in 2026. Keep text short."

But if someone clicks a Meta ad or discovers your brand through an LLM search engine, drops onto your product page, and is ready to buy a high-ticket item, they don't want to skim a short summary. They want to investigate.

If I'm about to buy from you, I want to see the raw specs right in front of me, not play hide-and-seek with a menu tab.

Post screenshot included as client-facing proof

Category POV: AI Product Photography

Selected June post intelligence

The worst trend I see in Shopify right now...

This post creates a strong stance against a visible market trend. It positions Kashyap as a quality filter for premium brands, not just a Shopify implementer.

Promote this post to reach people who matter to you.

Boost

Kashyap(Kash) Pavra • You

For e-commerce brands that have outgrown their Shopify theme...

Visit my website

2w •

The worst trend I see in Shopify right now? Replacing real product photography with AI-generated assets.

Founders think they're saving $10k in studio fees. They don't realize they're actually hurting their conversion rates.

Customers can spot "fake" instantly. One weird shadow or "perfect" skin texture, and they lose trust. They don't tell you why, they just close the tab.

If you want to sell a premium product, you cannot cut corners on your visual real estate.

A custom site framework only works if the assets inside it are real, grounded, and honest.

Stop letting AI cheapen your high-ticket brand.

Invest in real photography. Trust is the only currency that matters.

Krushi Shah and 12 others

Like

Comment

Repost

Send

520 impressions

View analytics

Post screenshot included as client-facing proof

Category POV: Indian Design Talent

Selected June post intelligence

Indian talent, especially designers...

This post expands Kashyap beyond tactical Shopify advice. It makes him a voice for Indian taste, global design standards and premium e-commerce craftsmanship.

Kashyap(Kash) Pavra  • You

For e-commerce brands that have outgrown their Shopify theme...

Visit my website

3d •

Indian talent, especially designers, has been known for being cheap and affordable. That was never the real reason we're good. We're good because of the taste we grew up with.

That taste is what's putting us on the global map now.

Talent is something you can learn. A design school teaches technique. Give someone enough time and the right course, and they can pick it up.

Taste does not work that way. You cannot teach it in a classroom. You build it by seeing good design around you for years, before you even know what design means.

Most Indian designers grow up around that kind of design every day. Old temples carry detailed carving work. Wedding clothes use color and pattern in ways no brief would ever ask for. Even a hand-painted truck on the highway has more thought in its layout than half the websites we review. None of this is something we go looking for. It is just there.

Post screenshot included as client-facing proof

What Worked And What To Do Next

June 2026 strategy read

What worked

- Founder proof
Origin and team stories created the strongest engagement.
- Buyer pain
Conversion, hidden product data and premium positioning are strong lanes.
- Contrarian quality POV
AI photography and template fatigue give Kashyap a clear stance.
- Design pride
Indian talent/taste can become a differentiating founder narrative.

Next month

- More founder-market lessons
Convert every client insight into a short market lesson.
- More proof of taste + revenue
Pair design quality with conversion, trust and product confidence.
- Add client before/after stories
Show how premium brands move from pretty stores to better buyer decisions.
- Keep screenshot evidence
Capture comments and viewer profiles as soon as posts begin moving.